HAUTE NECESSITIES The Street Art of Rebellion

Motorcycles have long represented rugged individualism. A Confederate Motor Company machine ramps it all up a notch, evoking principled individuality through the simple, pure, minimal, and skeletal form, which results in the simultaneous achievement of the high-tech and the primitive urge. This limited-edition Renaissance Fighter Motorcycle is featured in the 2008 Neiman Marcus Christmas Book. The bike packs 190 mph of performance into its cutting-edge carbon fiber, titanium, and aluminum chassis. Within its 62-inch wheelbase and 430 pounds, the Fighter incorporates an integrated braking system, as well as a slew of high-tech bells and whistles. Whatever road you have in store for it, you better act quickly—only 45 are being produced of this extraordinarily cool beast, for $110,000. ●
